

Insight into the impact of regulation and procurement strategies on project timing and cost

Situation

A large upstream company with a material position in an emerging O&G region with an uncertain regulatory environment was at the early stage of development planning. The client needed to clearly understand the choices available and cost implications for a range of procurement strategies.

Action

Upstream Oil & Gas Consultants:

- Provided insight into the stakeholders influencing regulatory change and the cost and schedule implications of different local content requirements
- Modeled the cost, timing and choices for major field development components and the capability of local and international suppliers

Result

The company obtained the key insights and a framework for moving forward with development and procurement planning. Equipped with a good understanding of the cost and schedule implications and risks, the client was in a strong position to influence partners and make choices.
